Protect Your Personal Information On The Go

By: Jim Stickley

Are you one to leave your checkbook and identification in your car when you go into the gym for an hour? If you are, you might want to reconsider. A group that authorities are calling the "Felony Lane Gang" may be targeting you.

The group, known to law enforcement on the East Coast, is warning about this group. They sit and wait at athletic clubs for potential victims to leave, realizing they will be gone for a while. They will then steal checkbooks and other information, head to the victim's bank and make a cash withdrawal.

To avoid being caught, rather than going to the nearest drive-thru teller, they opt for the far lane, or the "felony lane," which makes it very difficult for the teller to truly compare the ID to the thief.

In Pennsauken, New Jersey, two suspects were seen in photos, allegedly withdrawing funds after stealing a woman's purse outside a fitness center. Police also say this gang has stolen money in Delaware and Chester Counties in Pennsylvania within the past few months. Police believe this gang originated in Florida and has made its way all the way to Maine. A victim in Maine was robbed of $18,000.

The lesson to be learned is to safeguard your personal information. If you plan to be out of your vehicle and cannot take it with you, lock it in the trunk or glove box. If a thief cannot see it, they are less likely to break in and take it. Criminals tend to be opportunists and will likely go to the next car if they don't see something easy to grab right away.
